PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

With this, the fourth issue, we have completed the first volume of Muscogiana. For those of you who may be puzzled as to why it has taken two years to complete one volume, let me answer in two words: time and money. Our publication is almost wholly dependent upon volunteer help. Also, the Society has still not devised a plan to handle the funding of Muscogiana, although we have established a Publications Fund (donations welcomed!). Consequently, we are still publishing the journal on an irregular basis--with the goal of putting out at least two issues per year.

The Society has recently revived its committee system, and, as a result, future issues of Muscogiana will contain articles submitted by committee chairs on local courthouse, Bible, church, and cemetery records. However, the journal is still in need of material for publication. We therefore encourage you, the readers, to submit manuscripts treating the history of the area or the genealogy of one of its families. We will also consider articles dealing with research methodology and articles about specific genealogical research collections.

1990 was a good year for the Muscogee Genealogical Society. We had programs on Short Cuts to Genealogy, Civil War Battlefields, Salt Lake City Research, John Pemberton and the History of Coca Cola, Using Deeds, and Research at the Confederate Naval Museum. Special events for the year were an all-day workshop on Georgia Research given by Mary Warren, a walking tour of Linwood Cemetery in June, and a Christmas Banquet at the Victoria which featured Ken Thomas as the after-dinner speaker. Members of the Society embarked on three all-day fieldtrips: one, in July, to the Georgia Archives; another, in October, to the Washington Public Library (Macon); and the third, in December, to the Alabama Archives. On top of all this, we managed to publish two issues of Muscogiana!

Hopefully, 1991 will be as eventful. We will start out the year with our annual business meeting on January 26. Then on Saturday, February 9, the Society, in conjunction with the Columbus College Center for Continuing Education, will co-sponsor a seminar entitled "South Carolina Records and Research." The seminar will be conducted by Brent Holcombe, editor of The South Carolina Magazine of Ancestral Research. Brochures on this event should be out before January. For more information call (404) 568-2023 or write to the Center at Columbus College, Columbus, GA 31993-2399.

Happy ancestor-ing in 1991!

REPORTS OF COLUMBUS FIRES, 1874 - 1875

By

John R. Lassiter

Like many cities, Columbus suffered from severe fires in its formative years. The first large-scale fire in the city occurred during the night of Tuesday, March 15, 1842. Approximately twelve businesses were destroyed in the area of west Broad Street between Randolph and St. Clair Streets (Eleventh and Twelfth Streets). The city did not have a single fire engine at that time, but after the fire, council voted to purchase four. The following were published in Annual Reports of the Officers of the City of Columbus, GA, and the Report of Chief of Fire Department, 1874-75. The greatest loss, however, occurred during the night of Monday, October 15, 1838, when the Muscogee County Courthouse and all of its contents were destroyed by fire. These and other annual reports for the city of Columbus are located in the Columbus Collection, Genealogical and Historical Room, Bradley Memorial Library, Columbus, GA.

GENEALOGY

by

David J. Johnson
1311 Peacock Avenue
Columbus, GA 31906

It's a curious phenomenon that people spend so much time trying to trace down the name of a relative. Often endless hours are devoted to finding a record that proves someone did marry a great, great, great relative somewhere in Bulgaria or Buena Vista. And for what? We look at a piece of paper called a family tree. There it is: Miss Minnie DuVall born February 8, 1927, in Cumberland, North Carolina; Mr. Ebenezer Whitelaw born September 29, 1922, Badger, Michigan. From that point it blossoms backwards, stems and veins of a large and overwhelming blossom that is our past.

But how dreary. All those names and dates and places that are less than bones and fossils found by archaeologists. You remember picking up something like Genesis 5: 1-32:

The Descendants of Adam (1 Chr. 1:10-4)

5 This is the book of the generations of Adam. In the day that God created man, in the likeness of God made he him 2 male and female created he them; and blessed them, and called their name Adam, in the day when they were created. 3 And Adam lived a hundred and thirty years, and begat a son in his own likeness, after his image; and called his name Seth: 4 and the days of Adam after he had begotten Seth were eight hundred years: and he begat sons and daughters: 5 and all the days that Adam lived were nine hundred and thirty years: and he died.

32 And Noah was five hundred years old: and Noah begat Shem, Ham, and Japheth.

Now, that is just about as awful as anything you might ever have to listen to. Yet as genealogists, we often inflict such stuff onto our relatives in general, and our children in particular. Or at least I do. Yet I am somewhat compelled to do so. And I have often asked myself WHY?

There are many reasons of course. Everything from simply being nosy to a burning desire to be a Daughter of the American Revolution. I think, however, it goes beyond that. It seems that almost all people have a need to be connected to something other than themselves, and it difficult to connect to the future with any certainty. And it is almost impossible to attach to the lateral, whatever that might be. That leaves us the past. Look at all the world's religions, past and present. They get the lineage straight. And so do families when it comes to inheritances. And all of this has to do with perpetuating our spiritual heritage and our physical heritage. In short, genealogy is one way of dealing with stewardship. It gives us a look at the past and thus helps us know there is a future. If we sell our birthright for a pot of beans, if we are the family favorite and win the favor of our parents and get a fine new coat or a fast car and our other siblings do not, then, one way or another, we might be sold into bondage, one way or another, sent to Egypt or kept out of the Country Club.

So, how does the listing of those names, dates, places help us know? Well, certain stock stories are found, are nurtured, are passed on, those stories that help explain something about living, like so many stories from the Judeo-Christian tradition: Abram and Lot Separate, Abram Rescues Lot, A Son Promised to Abram, Hagar and Ishmael, Abraham Buys a Burial Ground for Sarah, and on and on. It is the stories retrieved from our genealogical research that mean so much to me.

It is through the name and the story of that name that one becomes alive in a different way. We no longer exist in aloneness, floating like a helium balloon without any mooring out into the vastness of space. But by being attached by a blood line stronger than any balloon string, being attached by blood line to earth we have the will and the courage to float out, more strength to become whatever it is we might need to become.

When I remember my grandfather Owens, bits and pieces of his life I either experienced or imagined come to me in the most helpful ways. When I call the roll in my classes, the names Owens will sometimes appear. Something happens. Are we relatives. And all quarter I watch for the correct time for me to say something, off hand like, "Where are your people from?" or "My mother's name was Owens." I hope for a response of connection. And I can't explain it.

But I remember Grandpapa. "Dave, steer clear of the law and doctors." And I remember stories about him and about his father that older family members have told.

And then I catch a glimpse of time, almost as physical as my class room or my car or my home. "I see the mountains of my childhood, the ones my grandfather saw, and his father before him. I get a perspective because . . .

The mountains around which I used to snake at fifteen mile an hour have now been scooped out and dozed through so that a car can go as fast as its engine will allow.

Sometimes local papers will give accounts of cars getting out of control and smashing through guard rails and sailing in long arcs, slow motion, two thousand feet before touching the tops of timber the limbs of which have never been touched by anything except birds and rain and snow and ice. Now this heavier ice tears limbs more savagely than one can imagine, a clump of metal rolling gently to a still place against an old tree's trunk. There it stays like a rotting stump burning slowly out its organic burn.

And before the small, crooked road, around which I drove as a young man, was made, before the bridge was built over the Nantahala River and roads around Tipton Gap and down through Tallulah Valley, up the ravine of the Cheoah and stopping at the bluff overlooking the Big Snow Bird River, my grandfather road a mule from Blowing Rock, down through Asheville and Haywood County to the last lands opened for settlement along the headwaters of Little Buffalo Creek on the final and irretrievable borders of the place of my birth. He followed the Cherokee trails that heretofore had been walked on only by moccasined feet. The steel of the mule's hoofs knocked holes in the earth.

My grandfather brought on the back of his mule an ax and a froe and a pot and a griddle, a file and a bag of corn meal, two pounds of seed, and on his back a long gun and under his coat powder and lead. With the ax he cut four strong saplings, sharpened their ends, and drove one of the sharpened saplings on this side of Little Buffalo Creek, waded the creek waist deep to the other side, using the remaining saplings as anchors and buoys against the water's current. He walked straight to a point marked exactly by the stride of his sturdy legs wearing hobnail boots greased with groundhog fat. When his feet stopped he drove another post. He turned ninety degrees and walked again. Where he stopped, a the large stone outcropping now called Devil's Cradle, the third stick was driven into the earth. Another turn and another driving and another turn, ending where the first stob had been driven into the earth so hard its top looked like a small broom, the pungent smell of hickory sap blooming like a white flower in that wilderness of green.

With the ax he chopped wood for a fire, an alien fire not borrowed from the tribal vessel or from a lightning struck log smoldering timelessly on the bald above Snake Mountain, but one struck from the birth of logos leaving the fumes of sulphur to mix with the smell of damp earth and running water. While the fire grew he cut more saplings and constructed a lean-to and covered it with more saplings and then pine boughs. He brought out the griddle and pot. In the pot he placed meal. From the creek he scooped water. With a stick he mixed the two and poured the batter onto his hot griddle. The air was filled with the one thing that linked my grandfather with the Cherokee.

There, around their villages, the Cherokee cut a girdle of bark from around each tree and sapling, made parallel cuts and pulled away a ring of bark, disconnecting those parts of the tree that waved in the air from the other parts that burrowed deep into the earth. The trees had been girdled and when spring came they did not show green. The summer sun touched a soil it had never touched. Things died and others grew. Birds carried new seeds.

GENEALOGY

So did the deer and bear and groundhog and squirrel. So did the Cherokee. They planted their corn and their beans and pumpkins all of which had come their long journey from hand to hand over the millennia. At harvest, the smell of corn cakes entered the air and the animals stood solid, their small noses expanding and contracting with alarm. They moved away. After the first crop or two of corn and beans and pumpkins the Cherokee moved away. The new ground stayed and replenished itself, a circle of small brush and flowers and wild strawberries where the raccoon and deer came to again and ate, a circle surrounded by a forest that had grown forever.

This process would repeat itself many times for both the Indian and the white man. The farm my grandfather staked out and cleared was growing back into timber before the Great Depression. During the forty's a dam was built on a tributary of West Buffalo Creek. The water backed up for miles into the mountains. The stones my grandfather built up with mud were knocked down and now lay in a heap under forty feet of water, water that still flows from the small crevices in every cove and hollow on this side of the Blue Ridge.

And the Cherokee, their life was changed, even those left far in the Big Snowbird Mountains on the satellite Reservation. When I was a child the Cherokee women and children walked single file along the road in front of my house, the women carrying sheets filled with baskets, the sheets tied to their backs. The baskets were sold for utilitarian purposes at Snider's Store. They were not much in demand. Metal buckets were better. The Cherokee men came behind or before the women and children. Never together.

Indians and log trucks. Log trucks and Indians filled the summers of my early life. The Indians and their loads of baskets went first. They soon were riding in beat up pickup trucks faded to the dulllest green one could ever imagine. And even the green was coated with the light gray dust that in other times nourished the growth of delicate ferns. The timber gone. Everything is fourth growth, but the roads accommodate many people from Florida and California who come to view the mountains, but for me, too many of the creeks are cluttered with milk bottles, too many of the Cherokee can no longer speak their native language. All that is left of my grandfather's farm is a set of rusty curry combs I took shortly after his death. The ball of yarn my grandmother made has been attacked by moths. And book worms have eaten most of the book my mother read from in the first grade. Only my memory holds dimly to what is all was, or possibly could have been.

And it is for stuff like this, memories, and knowledge, and caring about the future and the past that makes us send out those letters to unknown places trying to find a documented link and a story about a relative. This is why we spend hours, dizzy headed before microfilm machines, microfiche viewers, must books that are so old they must have desiccated t. b. germs between every page. We need to know. We recognize on some unspoken level that the stewardship of our lives, and even the world, depends, somehow, on our being tied to a bloodline that grows out of the earth itself, out of the creator of all life, out of the infinite into which we ultimately return, leaving still another one linked to a living branch of the family tree we call life. And that is GENEALOGY.

STALKING THE LOCAL HISTORY ARCHIVES: A GUIDE FOR FAMILY HISTORIANS

Callie B. McGinnis
1814 13th Avenue
LaDelle #11
Columbus, GA 31906

During the first year of research, most genealogists uncover a wealth of information that will not fit on a pedigree chart of a family group sheet; there just is not enough space. So, what do you do with all that military information on your great-great-great-grandpa who served in the Civil War? And what about that interesting story of your great-uncle being killed in a family feud? What most genealogists do with this kind of information is incorporate it into a narrative family history. At this point, magically, the genealogist is transformed into a family historian.

What then distinguishes "genealogy" from "family history?" Genealogy involves gathering and documenting the information needed to fill out pedigree charts and family group sheets. Family history fleshes out the information on those forms -- adding interesting details, theories, etc. The fruit of the genealogist's labor will be a notebook of pedigree charts and family group sheets, and possibly, a published genealogy which lists the members of each generation of a family, giving basic facts: names, dates and places of birth, marriage and death. On the other hand, the final product that the family historian aims for is a family history -- a narrative which details the movement of a particular family across the land, highlights the major characters and events, and places the family in its historical context.

A few researchers will choose early on to steer clear of family history. These individuals are genealogists in the strictest sense. Most of us, however, do plunge into family history, collecting both genealogical data and historical background as we dig further and further into our pasts.

For the family historian in search of new or supplemental information, a local history archives could prove a fertile hunting ground. A local history archives, basically, is a repository that collects material that relates to the history of a particular locale -- town, county or region. Before beginning archives research, however, the family historian needs an understanding of what an archives is -- and is not. The main thing for you, the researcher, to keep in mind is that an archives is not a library. Knowing the differences between archival and library operations will enable you to make an efficient search of a local history archives -- discovering many interesting details about your family and their role in the history of the place they called home.

The most obvious difference between an archives and a library is that a library, for the most part, collects published works: an archives, unpublished works, or "manuscripts."

THE LOCAL HISTORY ARCHIVES

Libraries purchase books from publishers and book jobbers, whereas archives usually solicit manuscript collections from individual, organizational and corporate donors. While you find row after row after row of books in a library, in an archives there are rows of shelves holding cardboard boxes filled with papers. In a local history archives, these "papers" might be the correspondence of a planter to his wife, or a merchant's ledger book, or maybe a farmer's journal -- in all cases, unpublished materials.

In a library, patrons usually have free and easy access to the major portion of the library's collection; besides physical access, most libraries provide intellectual access through a catalog (card or computer), which lists books by their authors, titles and subjects. When you look up a specific book in the catalog and write down the call number for that book, you can then go to the designated shelf location and retrieve that particular book.

Archives are not as self-service oriented. In a local history archives, there may be a reference collection of published materials (county histories, family histories, tombstone inscriptions, will abstracts, etc.), through which you are free to browse. However, the main portion of the collection -- the papers filed in those boxes -- is off-limits to browsers. As a rule, you are required to ask for a specific folder in a particular collection. To determine which folder in which collection you want to examine, you must consult the archivist. With guidance from this individual, you may be led first to a card file in which you look up your subject. Under a subject listing, you would see references to all the manuscript collections that contain information on that subject. Looking under your ancestor's name, you might find that the archives has the papers of that ancestor in a separate collection. Most of the time, however, you will not strike such genealogical pay dirt. In most cases, you will have to look under many related subjects -- the name of the school or church your ancestor attended, or the name of the town in which he lived, etc. -- to find relevant information.

Suppose, for example, that your ancestor was a peanut farmer and you are visiting the local history archives in the South Georgia county where he lived. The archivist may look up your ancestor's name in the card file and find nothing. Next, he may look under "peanuts" and find that there are two collections that contain information on peanut farming. His next step will be to pull finding aids for those two collections. A finding aid usually contains, among other things, an inventory which lists the items in each folder, in each box of a collection. By going through an inventory, you may locate some valuable information - - perhaps a list of all the peanut farmers in the county -- including your ancestor. Or perhaps you may come across a letter written by your ancestor to another peanut farmer!

Inventories can be long and tedious, and selecting materials from them often entails pure guesswork. On the other hand, some finding aids will include appendices which index the collection by personal names. In other cases, a finding aid may refer you to a similar collection housed in another archives.

Once you have delved through a number of manuscript collections, do not assume that your research at a local history archives is complete. There are probably a number of other sources to consult. For instance, many local history archives maintain photograph collections, access to which may be through a separate index. And perhaps there is a vertical file which contains clippings in folders arranged alphabetically by subject. Or, maybe there is a separate map collection that can show you where your ancestor lived. The main thing to remember is: after you have exhausted one source, ask the archivist what to examine next!

Local history archives are found in a variety of settings. Often they are integrated into a college or university library, frequently in an area designated "Special Collections." Less often, you will find an archives in a local public library. Also occasionally you may find local history archives that operate independently, such as a county or municipal archives or an archives run by the local historical society.

The easiest way to locate a local history archives near your ancestor's place of residence is through the reference department of the college, university or public library in the county or town where that ancestor lived. You can determine the name and address of the exact library by using *The American Library Directory*¹, a tool available in virtually all libraries. Write to this library -- or call or visit -- and ask the reference librarian for information on any archives in the area. Hopefully, you will be directed to at least one local history archives in the vicinity. Once you visit that archives, be sure to ask the archivist if there are other similar facilities in the area.

Another way to locate potentially valuable local history archives is through the use of the National Union Catalog of Manuscript Collections.² Known as NUCMC (pronounced "Nuck-Muck"), this valuable tool, to date, lists over 58,000 manuscript collections located in 1,325 archival repositories. NUCMC was begun in 1959 as an ongoing publication of the Library of Congress. Each volume lists manuscript collections housed in the country's major historical archives. Entries within each volume are grouped by institution and arranged by arbitrary manuscript numbers; they are accessed through use of a subject index. Unfortunately, no cumulative index has been published for the set. There is, however, a separately published Index to Personal Names in the National Union Catalog of Manuscript Collections.³

Most academic libraries should have a copy of the NUCMC set. (Not all, however, will have the personal name index.) By looking up your ancestor's name or place of residence in one of the indexes, you may discover an interesting collection in an archives you had never considered as a possible research ground.

Suppose, for example, that one of the ancestral black sheep in your family had done a short stint in a Campbell County, Georgia, prison. You might look in a NUCMC index

under "Campbell County, Georgia," and discover that entry #79-74 contains information on Campbell County prisons. When you turn to entry #79-74, you would discover that a prisoners' record book for 1877-1929 is owned by the Atlanta Historical Society! You might not have thought to look there for a county record from a county that no longer exists.⁴

One word of caution about using NUCMC: it does not access every historical archives in the country -- only the major ones. There may be valuable materials in a small repository that does not participate in NUCMC. To locate these smaller archives, you will have to use the method described above (i.e., contact the reference department in an area library).

Once you locate an archives that owns (or may own) some potentially valuable materials, you should plan to visit in person. Of course, you may write for specific information, and frequently the archives staff will be able to send you material (usually, for a fee), but they will not be able to do in-depth research on your family.

Using a local history archives can be frustrating for the family historian who is not prepared for a true research experience. Understanding how an archives is set up and how it functions can alleviate much of this frustration. Also, at the outset, you must realize that archival research consumes time. When you visit a local history archives, you should plan to spend at least three or four hours doing research. If you can afford it, try to spend the night in town so you can spread your research out over a couple of days. And one final word of warning: Always, always call before you go for a visit. For one thing, your call will alert the archivist of your research interest; he may be able to inform you on the spot of some relevant materials. But even more importantly, by calling you can verify the archives hours of operation. Frequently an archives department in a university library is only open from eight until five, or maybe just one to five; whereas the library may be open till midnight. Sometimes the archives will close down when the archivist goes on vacation; or sometimes it may close for an obscure holiday you never knew existed!

Title: Hanna Papers

Source: Lewis C. Hanna

Size: 3 boxes

Processing By: Callie B. McGinnis Date: August 1, 1989

Biography/History:

June Mizpah Lanier was born in Temple, Texas on June 11, 1916. She married Lewis C. Hanna, and in July of 1961 they moved to Columbus, Georgia.

Once in Columbus, Mrs. Hanna became interested in genealogy, and began tracing her father's family, the Laniers, who had lived on a large farm just west of Lafayette, Alabama. In conjunction with this research, she started visiting valley area cemeteries in an attempt to find the resting places of her ancestors. Her interest in cemetery research grew, and she eventually began to help others locate the burial places of their ancestors. Locally, she became the authority on cemeteries.

According to her husband, Mrs. Hanna was very precise and systematic in her cemetery surveys. When writing down tombstone inscriptions, she would always start at the back left corner of the cemetery and work her way across to the right. When she had finished one row, she would move forward to the next, and begin with the first grave on the left.

When the East Alabama Genealogical Society (Opelika, Alabama) was founded, Mrs. Hanna joined and became very active in promoting cemetery research through this organization. Much of her work was published in this group's journal, Tap Roots. She also joined the Muscogee Genealogical Society and served as chair of its Cemetery Committee until her death.

Mrs. Hanna's main project was the transcribing of the Linwood Cemetery Card File - a project that took over a year to complete. Her routine was to spend Monday, Wednesday and Friday mornings at the Riverdale Cemetery Office, hand copying the

HANNA INVENTORY

Linwood records. Then, on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, she would type up what she had copied. The end product filled six boxes (one ream each) of typing paper.

June Hanna died in Columbus on March 5, 1989.

Scope and Content:

This collection consists mainly of surveys of cemeteries in the Columbus-Phenix City area. The two major surveys are for Linwood Cemetery (Columbus) and Pine Grove Cemetery (Phenix City). Mrs. Hanna personally surveyed many of these cemeteries -- sometimes with the aid of her husband, Lewis. In some surveys, she was assisted by other individuals, including Mattie Belle Smith and T. J. Peddy. Some of the cemetery research in the collection was gleaned from Mormon (LDS) records.

Most of the cemetery surveys are typed on 8 1/2" x 11" typing paper. Some of the larger surveys are indexed. Part of the Linwood survey is on notecards. (Note: Mrs. Hanna abandoned this card system while in the "BR's").

In addition to cemetery records, the collection also contains Bible records, genealogical research and a few family recipes. Some of the Bible records contain information on slave births.

Much of the material in this collection is also on file at the Bradley Public Library (Columbus). Mrs. Hanna had some of her surveys and research published in Tap Roots, the journal of the East Alabama Genealogical Society.
